Training Formats and Delivery Options

Frequently Asked Questions · https://www.pshsa.ca/help-centre/training-formats-and-delivery-options/

What is the difference between eLearning, virtual instructor-led, and in-person instructor-led training?

eLearning is self-paced online training that learners complete independently; virtual instructor-led training is delivered live online by an instructor so learners can participate remotely in real time; and in-person instructor-led training takes place face-to-face in a classroom or workplace setting.

Browse our training courses.

What is private delivery training?

Private delivery training is training arranged for a specific organization or team rather than through a public course. PSHSA can deliver private sessions online or in person, helping organizations train groups of employees together in a format that fits their needs.

Learn about our private training options.

What are the required eLearning courses for all workplaces?

Required eLearning will depend on the workplace and the legal requirements that apply, but Ontario employers commonly need to ensure workers and supervisors complete basic occupational health and safety awareness training, workplace violence and Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System (WHMIS). Some roles, hazards, or sectors may require additional training.

Understand your mandatory compliance obligations.